History

Breeze Airways was founded in 2018 by aviation entrepreneur David Neeleman, who also co-founded JetBlue Airways. The airline officially launched operations in May 2021 with the mission of providing nonstop, point-to-point service between underserved cities in the U.S. Breeze chose Pittsburgh as one of its key markets due to its strong demand for affordable, direct travel options.

About

Breeze Airways is an American low-cost airline that emphasizes affordability, convenience, and excellent customer service. Operating a fleet of Airbus A220 and Embraer E-Jets, Breeze offers comfortable seating, customizable fare options, and a streamlined digital booking experience. The airline's "Nice, Nicer, Nicest" fare structure allows passengers to choose from different levels of service based on their travel needs and budget. With a focus on nonstop flights to secondary airports, Breeze eliminates unnecessary layovers, making travel more efficient.

Services Offered

Breeze Airways offers a variety of services designed to enhance the travel experience. Passengers can choose from three fare options: "Nice" (basic economy), "Nicer" (extra legroom and priority boarding), and "Nicest" (first-class experience with more perks). The airline provides an easy-to-use mobile app for booking, check-in, and flight management. Complimentary and paid in-flight refreshments are available, depending on the fare class. Breeze also offers a flexible change and cancellation policy, allowing travelers to modify their plans without excessive fees.

Features

Breeze Airways stands out with several unique features that make travel more convenient and enjoyable. The airline operates a modern fleet with comfortable seating, including extra-legroom options and first-class seating. Its user-friendly mobile app simplifies booking and check-in, while flexible fare structures cater to different budgets and preferences.
